

Students prepare for open meeting

VOL. 63 NO. 38 TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1973 3 CENTS

With only 24 hours to go before the upcoming open meeting, Daily supporters and staff are making final efforts to assure a good turnout.

Yesterday, 500 posters went up on bulletin boards all over campus urging students to attend the open meeting. It was called to discuss the Daily budget and to urge Council to enable the Daily to continue providing at an equal basis all services it has provided in the past.

Budgetary cutbacks have threatened the Daily with a reduction in pages and in subsidiary budget funds for photos, taxis, meal chits, and printing expenses. Members of the Daily staff have expressed the fear that the quality of the paper may deteriorate as a result. Joan Mandell, editor of the McGill Daily, said she is optimistic that many students will attend the open meeting. Three hundred students are required for a quorum.

"Reaction to the Daily this year is better than it has been in the past," she said. "Most students realize we are trying to increase campus coverage this year. I am sure they will come out to support us."

The latest Daily crisis erupted when finance director Don Schreiber presented a trimmed subsidy of about $35,000 to Council. The original Daily budget asked for a $44,000 subsidy.

Schreiber, also engineering representative, proposed cutting the subsidy by $17,000. Two council meetings later, what some councillors termed a "compromise" subsidy of about $28,000 was finally given to the Daily.

However, the Daily staff rejected the budget, especially since costs have increased in the last year.

They started a petition for an open meeting that 1500 students signed in less than three full days of collecting signatures. Many students expressed their intention of coming to the meeting.

Signatories came from all faculties.

The meeting itself promises to be controversial. Students' Society President Paul Drager has said he intends to challenge the constitutionality of some of the motions proposed on the agenda of the open meeting.

The meeting takes place tomorrow at 1 p.m. in the Union ballroom.

I.S.A. message

Everyone is familiar with the phrase "the international character of McGill." It is a well-known fact that this university has the highest enrolment of foreign students in Canada. One-fifth of McGill's population is 'foreign', that is, non-Canadian. Sometimes it is convenient for different people (for different reasons) to group us as 'foreign students', a distinct species. Other times, it is better to call us 'McGill students' since we are part and parcel of the greater 15,000 student body, (again for quite different reasons). Whatever the category we are placed under, we are still unique in the sense that we are subject to certain constraints, some of which deeply affect us.

First of all, why do foreign students keep coming to McGill? Reasons are varied. A cheaper education and a degree from McGill are two good reasons for American students to be here. Some students come to experience another way of life. The majority of students from the Third World are here not because of a cheaper education. On the contrary, attending a university in North America means ten to twenty times the cost of a local university, something quite beyond the reach of the most part of the people in Third World countries. Inadequate higher education facilities at home leaves two options: forgo higher studies or scrape up enough money to go elsewhere to study. Wealthier families can afford the luxury of sending their children abroad to universities in North America, Europe, Australia and so on. Others manage with enough funds to get an air ticket, one or two years tuition and living expenses and hope to make do in the later years by working in the summer. Finally there are the few who have scholarships of one kind or another to finance them through school.

The first obstacle foreign students are faced with is a financial one — the regulation that stipulates that each student-visa holder must have 'adequate' funds and therefore not permitted to work part-time or summer, is a discriminatory one. It discriminates not only against those who are from certain economic classes, but also people from the Third World. Economic excuses that 'explain' this regulation are but window-dressings that can be easily refuted. Waiting in limbo for some new and unequal regulations from the Immigration Department has taken on the role of an annual ritual for many of us.

The premise working basis for granting immigrant status to students is: to select only qualified graduates who have shown ability in contributing to the betterment of Canadian society. This policy is a far cry from "making our country your country."

On dealing with McGill, one problem area is that of admissions. Although the admission policy for foreign students of McGill has been revamped to the satisfaction of many, there are cases where students are asked to do an extra year of studies or made to take certain unnecessary courses in order to obtain a bachelor or masters degree. A diploma, certificate or degree from a country other than Canada is not always rightly recognised.

Housing problems are common to all of us. The foreign student, in particular, finds it difficult to secure a place in the residences because the deadline for applications is in most cases earlier than his McGill acceptance. Living off-campus is costly, and often landlords and janitors prefer not to have an 'alien' tenant.

The list of problems does not end here. Foreign students are confronted with an endless series of nagging nuisances, and it is always easy to shrug our shoulders and hope that it will be better for the next person. Passive acceptance is only comfortable to an extent.

The workshop on "Foreign Students on Campus" to be held on Thursday Nov. 15 serves as an opportunity to articulate our problems as well as our suggestions. Each of us has gone through inconvenience some time or another. This is a chance to give your views.

Day care hearing stalls

by Vera Mesenzew

The fate of the Judicial Committee hearing on day care remains uncertain. The petitioners of the hearing, the McGill Day Care Co-operative, have been unable to prove that the MDCC has been incorporated, counsel for the petitioners said.

The Judicial Committee suspended its hearings on day care two weeks ago on the grounds that the MDCC had not proved it was a body approved by the government under the Quebec Companies Act.

The hearing was petitioned by arts and science representative, Will Hoffman, when Students' Society President Paul Drager announced last September that he would ignore the resolution taken last March on day care. The resolution stated that the sum of one dollar should be taken from the Students' Society fee of each student. However, there was to be a check-off system at registration whereby any student might indicate that he did not want one dollar of his SS fee to go to MDCC.

The Judicial Committee hearing cannot proceed unless the petitioners can produce the letters patent from the government. The government, however, cannot grant the letters until the MDCC is in full operation. In order to be fully operative, the MDCC requires space for the centre. Since the MDCC has not been granted any funds by Council, the MDCC had to borrow more money to rent a space. The space was already rented when the MDCC finally raised the money. Moreover, the March resolution states the SS must provide space for the day care centre. It has not done this.

Counsel for Will Hoffman, Gerry Kandestin and Carl Ravinsky, urged that the resolution passed last March did not specify a date of incorporation. Ravinsky said that the Judicial Committee has interpreted the resolution in saying that incorporation has to be proved before the case can be heard by the committee.

Drager has opposed the open meeting resolution on the grounds that it could set a precedent of irresponsible spending by students in support of outside organizations.

Hoffman has claimed that Drager has defied the SS constitution by not carrying out the resolution. According to Hoffman, Drager has acted undemocratically. The resolution required that Drager set up a check-off system rather than the ballot vote that appeared at registration. Furthermore, the Open Meeting allocated funds to the MDCC, which Drager has withheld.

Drager was not available for comment.

Judicial Committee of the Students' Society

The following question has been referred to the Judicial Committee of the Students' Society on behalf of the Executive Committee of the Students' Society:

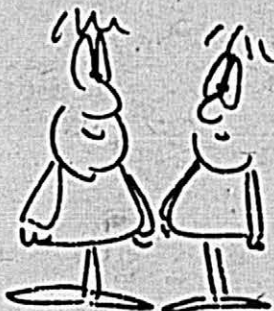

"Is the Executive Committee of the Students' Society bound to carry out a resolution properly passed at a valid Open Meeting of the Students' Society, where such resolution orders or requires the expenditure of a significant amount of Students' Society funds?"

Any student wishing to make a submission on this subject to the Judicial Committee is required to give notice of such an intention to the Chief Justice, Sam Berliner, by Tuesday, November 20, 1973, by leaving the said notice with the Receptionist at Chancellor Day Hall

Open letter to engineers

by Andrew Plank
E2, Engineering

Tomorrow, McGill students will have the opportunity to attend an open meeting of the Students' Society to show their support for the Daily.

In the past week I've spoken with a number of engineers about the budget controversy, and I can't help feeling that many of them are allowing unfounded prejudices against the Daily to stand in the way of their good judgment.

The arguments I have heard against the Daily from some engineers seem to indicate a basic misunderstanding of the issues. Many arguments just don't stand up.

The reductions concern budgets for printing, photography, taxi expenses, meal tickets, and transportation for the coverage of sports events. Yet many people seem to think other areas of the budget are at issue. They argue that the Daily should be able to cut its expenses in those other areas to provide money to cover deficits in the categories named above. This argument is not valid because if the Daily could afford cuts in other areas, budget-conscious councillors would have spotted them. Besides, the Daily was told specifically where to trim its expenses.

A typical argument from engineers and many others on campus seems to be, "Why should I support the Daily's demands? The Daily is not fulfilling its role. I want it to keep me informed on what's happening here at McGill, not on the political situations in Chile and Argentina."

A number of points should be made in answer to that question.

First of all, this year's Daily has greatly increased its coverage of McGill issues and events. About 75 per cent of this year's articles have been directly concerned with McGill, and most of the other 25 per cent has dealt with students in other parts of the world or with issues that do directly relate to McGill students, such as the provincial elections.

Students who want more news about McGill in the Daily should go out tomorrow to support the Daily. The areas of the budget that have been cut are those that allow the Daily to cover McGill events more comprehensively.

The Daily does not need meal tickets and taxi expenses to cover the "political" scene. These expenses are for reporters and other workers who remain on campus late into the night typing up articles on the day's events at McGill. These people often have to take a taxi home because buses do not run in the wee hours of the morning.

Travel expenses for the sports writers who have to attend games on other campuses have also been cut back. The photo budget, which is used almost exclusively to cover McGill events, has been cut back. With these expenses removed from the budget, isn't it likely that reporters and photographers will begin to take unkindly to the pinch on their wallets? The only logical outcome can be more "politics" and less McGill in our Daily.

...Or more advertising and less McGill in the Daily. This is one of the steps the Daily could take to remedy the cut in its printing budget. Remember the last issue of the Pot, engineers? It was about sixty percent advertising. Do we want a similar fate to happen to the Daily?

I think the engineers' attitude towards the Daily is based more on unfounded beliefs than on

To consider the following motions:

- 1) Be it resolved that the motion pertaining to the McGill Daily budget passed by Students' Council on October 31, 1973, be rescinded.
- 2) Be it resolved that Students' Council respect the editorial integrity of the McGill Daily and support its constitution as the daily newspaper published by the Students' Society, with all the features and facilities necessary to provide the same level of news coverage in the future as it has done in the past. This level shall in no respect be lower than the provisions contained in the McGill Daily budget passed by Students' Council for the 1972-73 academic year.

- 3) Be it resolved that the original budget for 1973-74 proposed by the McGill Daily editor to the Finance Committee—with a projected expenditure over revenue of $43,907—be accepted. This hereby rescinds all Council budget allocations to the Daily for 1973-1974 in conflict with it.

All students are eligible to attend the open meeting and vote on the foregoing motions. To be admitted to the meeting, you must present your McGill student I.D. card.

concrete evidence. Engineers resent the "fact" that the Daily is run by a clique of "pinko" arts students, even though this isn't true. I've been on the staff of the Daily for two weeks, but in that short amount of time I have seen evidence that quite the contrary is true. The Daily is very open to new staffers from all faculties, especially from those faculties which are under-represented, such as engineering. (There are two reporters and three photographers from engineering on the staff.)

There is also serious open discussion on editorial policy such as "How much coverage, if any, should be given to foreign politics?" Really, if engineers find it hard to think of the Daily as their paper, they have only themselves to blame.

Tomorrow, the open meeting will begin at 1 p.m. in the Union ballroom. If engineers are really interested in McGill, and in representation from their faculty in and on the Daily, they will forget their prejudices and turn out en masse to support the Daily at the meeting.

LOOT

Theatre Encounter presents Loot by Joe Orton at McGill Union Theatre, 3480 McTavish, from Tuesday, November 13th to Saturday, November 17th. Tickets are $1.50 for students and senior citizens except Saturday, when all tickets are $2.00. Show stars Tom Rack, John Peters, Martin Kevan, Bronwyn Mantel, Peter Bierman and Ian Clark, and is directed by Philip Coulter. The plot involves one body, a psychopathic nurse, her next victim, and two bank robbers with 104,000 pounds to hide. Their efforts to conceal the money from a manic police detective posing as an Inspector from the Water Board are continually thwarted in a bizarre series of events, in which the body plays no small part. Underneath the comedy, the play is a cutting statement about the role of the police in society today. For reservations, call 392-8989.

GAY STUDIES SEMINAR

Coordinated for the third year by two McGill professors, the seminar this year will discuss issues arising out of D. Altman's Book, Homosexual: Liberation & Oppression.

Political, literary, sociological and medical themes will be developed in short presentations by the participants and invited speakers. Emphasis is on discussion and group process.

Seminar is open to gay women and men at McGill or elsewhere; additional people to help plan and coordinate the program are especially needed. First meeting is Tuesday, November 13, 8:00 p.m., room R2/10, Redpath Library.

FOREIGN STUDENTS

A workshop jointly sponsored by the Chaplaincy Services at McGill, the Dean of Students, and the ISA, will be held on Thursday, Nov. 15 from 12-2 p.m. in Leacock council room 8th floor.

Problem areas facing foreign students in Canada will be discussed with special reference to McGill. As this is an attempt to air complaints and constructive suggestions, foreign students are urged to attend.

The ISA has a panel of four speakers who will be representing the students. Topics under discussion mainly deal with immigration and summer employment problems, residence and off-campus housing, admission to McGill, and related problems. The student speakers are Pat Austin, Ophelia Weeks, Michael Wang and Choo Wai Hong.

MANAGEMENT UNDERGRADUATE SOCIETY

Tuesday, November 13, at 3:30 p.m. in room 454 of the Samuel Bronfman Building, Mr. Percy Bishop will speak on "Finance and National Responsibility," a topic which concerns the function Canada's financial institutions must assume, and the practices they must forgo, if Canada is to remain an economically and politically independent nation.

During his business career, Mr. Bishop has been involved in financing oil and gas holding interests in western Canada, and in real estate development in the Toronto area. Also, at one time he owned "Library," "Saturday Night," and "The Canadian Magazine." His business experience has highly qualified him to speak on such matters as "Foreign Control and the Canadian Financial Structure" and "How We Lost and Can Gain Control of our Economy." Refreshments will be served after. Presented by the Management Undergraduate Society.
